From where I sit... by Joe Marsh

Matt Doorly Versus the Tomato

Matt Doorly's skin broke out in a rash last week. He finally admitted to Doc Hollister he'd eaten twelve tomatoes in a row just the day before.

"Shucks," said Doc. "That's all that's the matter with you. That kind of eating would turn anybody red."

So now Matt has not only cut out all tomatoes for himself. He's forbidden his family to eat tomatoes. And won't even have them in the house. Says tomatoes are anti-social and ought to be prohibited by law.

Funny how some people rush off to extremes like that. They take a wholesome thing and overdo it till it disagrees with them—or maybe find they don't happen to like it—and then they want it banned for everybody.

From where I sit, folks ought to realize there's a middle ground in everything—a middle ground of moderation on the one hand . . . and tolerance for our neighbors on the other.

AND LONG AFTER THE WAR THEY WILL SERVE US

We are often surprised at the understanding of our problems, which so many customers show. Of course we have tried—in our advertising messages, and in our personal contacts with you, to make you understand that many of the materials and services we gave you in the past have "gone to war." We have also explained to you that the fabrics you send to us are wartime products which can't always come back to you as well as we'd like them to.

We firmly believe that it is through these honest explanations on our part, that we have held our customers in spite of delays in service, and whatever other disappointments we have been forced to—unavoidably. At least you know we have served you through the emergency, to the best of our ability, and we want you to know that we sincerely appreciate your understanding attitude.

We now are forced to announce that due to manpower shortage, we will be UNABLE TO DO ANY MORE CURTAINS until further notice.

This war of distance and fast movement depends heavily on Communications—a network which covers the globe. The backbone of this network is the telephone and on it our fighting men often rely for their very lives.

* * * The telephone facilities that ordinarily would be available at home to take care of your requirements are more in demand than ever overseas. Meanwhile we are providing more service for more telephones than ever before here at home.

* * * Our first obligation is to meet the service demands of war, public health and safety. We will continue to do our best for every telephone user with the equipment now available and your understanding and co-operation are sincerely appreciated.
