Healthful Treatment For Those War-Time Blues

LISTEN, lady—if you're missing someone who is far away, be cheered by a hope for and a belief in a bright future. Yours is yet a life to live—a life that can be full of many good things — a life that will be free in a country that will give you peace and a chance for the things you want to make that life rich and complete.

Foremost in the minds of many today is the thought of a home. Even as you devote yourself to those tasks which contribute to victory, it is pleasant to dream of that home that can some day be yours. In fact, it's a wonderful treatment for war-time blues to get out paper and pencil and sketch your ideas. The living room here; the kitchen there; the bedroom to the south; you figure it out to suit yourself.

One thing about a home—it's personal and intimate and a tremendously important part of one's life. Consequently, most folks have their own individual ideas and like to think of a home in distinctly personal terms. And so it should be.

After the war, more and more people will be able to realize their dreams of home-ownership. New kinds of furniture, advanced ideas in heating plants and air-conditioning, gleaming new metals and plastics for your kitchen will all add to the pleasure of building and owning a home.

Lumber will play the major role in future home-building. The easy workability of wood makes it possible for you to build a home that is highly individual; a home of character patterned to your needs.

The natural insulating quality of wood; its sturdiness; its long life; its low cost all contribute to its superiority as a building material.

Trademarked "4-Square" lumber will not be made until after the war. But the government does realize the necessity of keeping existing structures in good, usable condition for the duration.

So in the meantime . . . until victory . . . you'll find only materials for essential maintenance and repair. Materials such as paints, insulation, Red Cedar Shingles, lumber for repair and vital farm construction, and other similar items are still available at your Boise Payette yard.

The War Bonds you buy today do double duty. Your war bond investment will bring victory closer and will help you finance a new home later.

The BUILDING BUG, too, has gone to war!
